Dear Parents and Carers

Tiny Happy People

Tiny Happy People is a BBC website full of advice on children's language development, with ideas for how you can help your child to learn, activities to put these into practice and information on the benefits of doing them.

All of the advice and videos have been quality checked by panels of professionals including health visitors, midwives and speech and language therapists.

There are films and articles on the Tiny Happy People website, which has been chosen by a speech and language therapist to support different speech and language goals, from building pre-verbal communication skills, to helping with listening and attention, through to supporting speech.

These resources could prove useful to follow up on speech and language therapy appointments or if you are waiting on a speech and language therapy referral for your child.
